Thunderbirds Are Go

Zero X built by Mastermodels of Feltham-no known kit parts.

Two models one 7.5 feet, one. 3 foot 6 inches

Rescue jets

The Rescue jets combined the wings from an F-105 Thunderchief kit (Monogram?) with the fuselage from an F-102 Delta Dagger kit (Revell?). I believe the vertical fins on the ends of the wings are F-105 horizontal stabilizers. It looks like the vertical stabilizer came from some other jet kit (could it have been the F-105?) and by the shape it looks like it was flipped upside down and mounted backwards. The pod mounted on the top of the vertical stabilizer appears to be the fuel tank/bomb from a B-58 Hustler kit (Monogram?). It was mounted upside-down and without the aft section with tail fins. The F-102's nose cone appears to have been replaced by the tail section and fins from the B-58 kit's fuel tank/bomb. The fixed skid landing gear appears to have been made using the bomb and bomb rack parts from the F-105 kit. The bombs had their tail fins removed and are flipped around so the back end (the pointed end) is forward. The decal markings are a combination of US Air Force markings along with what appears to be a Soviet Air Force red star superimposed on top of a British Royal Air Force roundel.

Top left : Page from 1964 Bulgin catalogue : Anderson knobs would be K370 knob and K372 dial.

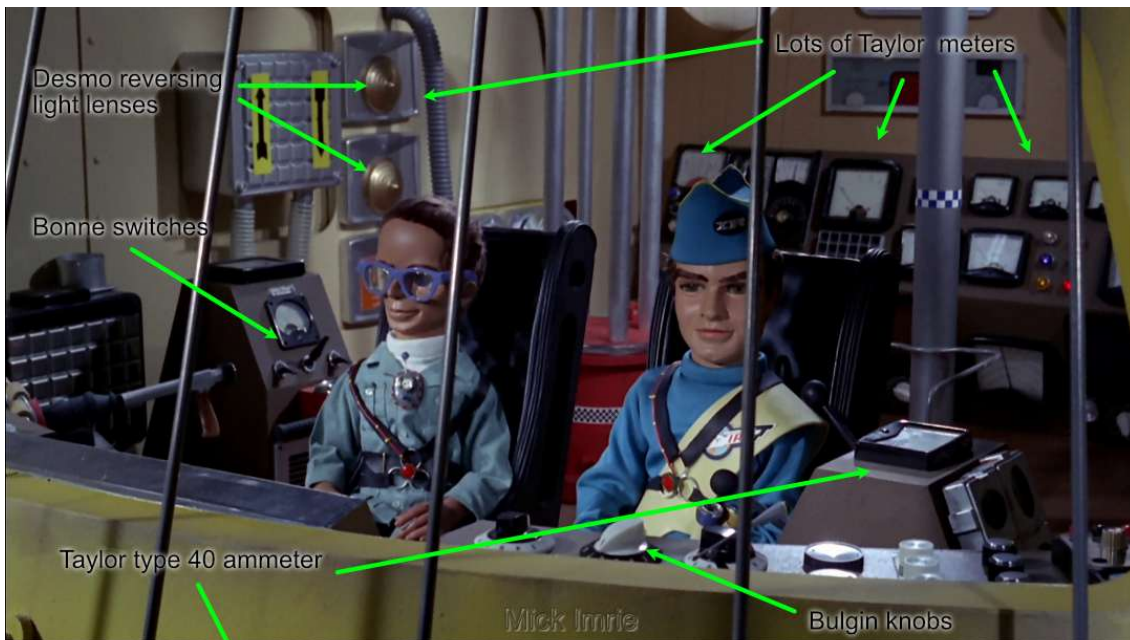

Right : Pages from Halfords catalogues from 1962 and 1965 showing piano key (no.10) and flasher switch (no.12) as seen in the Crablogger interior. These are attributed to 'Bonne'. (Note also the indicator switch from TB1)

Bottom : Two examples of the type of meter seen in the Crablogger interior; no manufacturer, 2 - 2.25 inches square.
: A type 40 Taylor ammeter; Taylor Electrical Instruments LTD were on the Slough Trading estate just a stones throw from the Anderson Studios

Credit Mick Emrie

The ammeter on top of the console is a Taylor type 40 and measures 3 5/8ths inches wide by 3 inches tall.

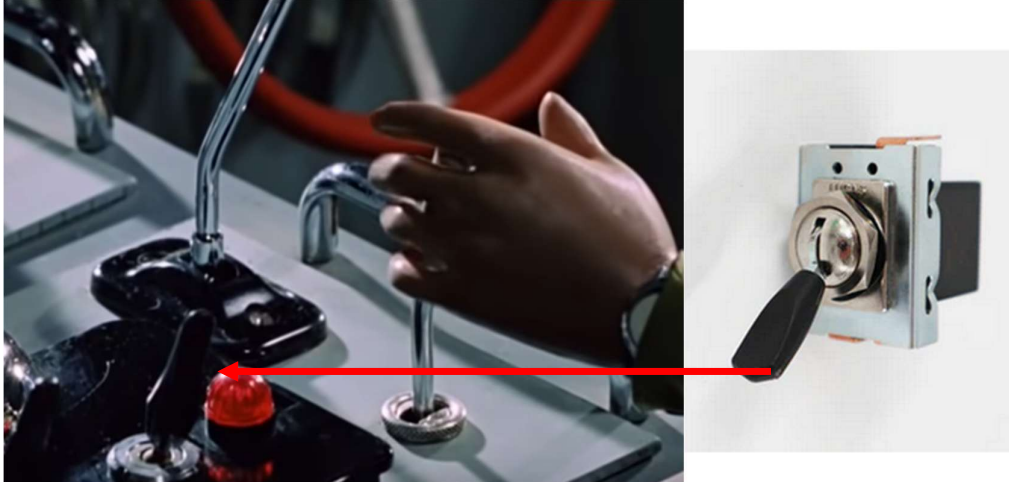

The small meter on the front I cannot attribute to a manufacturer but similar meters are available on ebay and date from the 40s and 50s. (see pics for examples) these meters are 2 - 2.25 inches square.

Also used in Desperate Intruder and Pit of Peril and Danger and Ocean Deep

The taller ones are from the Kay Chemistry Set which was used in the series preceding Thunderbirds. In Thunderbirds we have a mix of the two types used and my impression is that the Kay Set is still predominant.
